

Organisation and governance

EuroMarine was created in 2014 as a Consortium of European Organisations merging three former European Networks of Excellence (EUR-OCEANS, Marine Genomics Europe, and MARBEF). EuroMarine is established for a 10-year renewable term, with the hosting and initial coordination entrusted to CNRS and IRD. The General Assembly (GA) is the main decision-making body, with representatives from all Member Organisations, and a Steering Committee, elected by the GA, oversees operational matters. Both are supported by a distributed Secretariat. Anyone from the marine scientific community may provide input towards the construction of the EuroMarine strategic programme.

EUROPEAN
 MARINE RESEARCH
 NETWORK

Why become a Member

- ▶ EuroMarine offers a broad coverage of disciplines, inclusiveness, openness to emerging fields, and the ability to assemble multidisciplinary teams, from individual scientists and small research teams to larger marine science institutes, to address current and emerging issues and challenges in the marine domain.
- ▶ The network provides a forum for debate and discussion within the marine scientific community. With access to new ideas and directions, Members are able to build professional relationships and develop strategic collaborations.

- ▶ The importance and need for a supported, productive marine scientific community is communicated externally, promoting the advance of science while addressing societal challenges. As the young network evolves, more services will support and help sustain the marine scientific community.
- ▶ Since its inception, EuroMarine has contributed over €490,000 in funding to 68 bottom-up ideas from its Members. More than 1600 scientists, including early career researchers, have participated in foresight workshops, working groups, capacity building exercises, training courses and more. A successful Individual Fellowship Programme for early career researchers was launched in 2017.

EuroMarine is a bottom-up European marine science network promoting the emergence of novel collaborative research topics from genes to ecosystems in changing oceans.

EuroMarine funds scientific, foresight, and training activities, through its annual competitive calls, bringing teams together to share, collaborate and collectively push boundaries in marine science.

The network supports a holistic and interdisciplinary approach to marine research in three priority areas:

- ▶ understanding marine ecosystems for healthy oceans
- ▶ building scenarios for marine ecosystems under changing oceans
- ▶ marine science as a provider of new concepts for innovation and technology

EuroMarine co-operates with the European Marine Board, JPI Oceans and the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform for Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services (IPBES). It contributes to translating the objectives of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals of the 2030 Agenda into actions, and highlights the potential to advance marine research using incentive funding, engaging with stakeholders across all levels.

In 2018, EuroMarine counts 59 Member Organisations in 22 countries. New organisations are welcome to apply to join. As a self-funded organisation, EuroMarine charges a minimum membership fee of €2,500 per year for each institution, although Members are invited to contribute more to increase the number of collaborative activities that can be supported. EuroMarine also includes invited (non-paying) Members to involve organisations from developing countries or strategic partners in its activities.
